Recently I reviewed the status of indebtedness to the Agency of former employees and felt that all accounts, except that of [REDACTED] were well in hand.

Inasmuch as you originally handled this case and unquestionably know much more about it than any of us, I thought that you should be aware of its current status. I should, of course, appreciate any guidance you would like to give in connection with pursuing the matter. It is my personal opinion that we will probably never collect very much, if any, more of this indebtedness, and the sixty-four-dollar question is whether we should turn over the case to the Department of Justice.
